

J.P. Morgan Appoints Catherine Moore Head of International Commercial Card

New York, September 7, 2011 -- J.P. Morgan's Commercial Card unit today announced that Catherine Moore has been appointed head of International Commercial Card, covering markets in Europe, Middle East, Africa, Asia Pacific, and Latin America.

International Commercial Card provides corporate travel and entertainment cards, executive cards, purchasing cards, lodge/travel cards and single-use account solutions to thousands of private and public sector organizations around the world. At J.P. Morgan, the Commercial Card business is closely aligned with the Treasury Services business, which includes cash management and trade services, enabling a range of payment solutions for overall working capital management.

Ms. Moore will lead International Commercial Card as it addresses the requirements of multinational and regional firms that are expanding their footprint across the globe, consolidating their transactions to maximize efficiencies, and adopting a more holistic approach to procurement management.

This comes at a time when clients are looking for practical solutions to manage a diverse financial infrastructure, as well as requiring a combination of global reach and local in-country expertise to support finance and procurement initiatives in multiple markets. Additionally, the harmonization of the European payments market, including cards, under SEPA, and the growth of the cards market in this region, is driving opportunities for increased efficiency in card programs.

Ms. Moore has been leading J.P. Morgan's International Prepaid business for the last 12 months and, prior to joining the firm in 2010, was Vice President, EMEA Marketing and Strategy at American Express Global Commercial Card.
